Hinterstroder

As soon as we hopped in the car the weather deteriorated. The aim today was to drive to Hinterstroder - a one hour drive away - and take a short trek around the rarified alpine air of Upper Austria. Not to be. The rain set in, the temperature plummeted and we found all the cable cars closed. Although we were rugged up, our thoughts of getting up close and personal with the environment quickly evaporated. Instead we ambled around the area in our car enjoying the mountain mist, the glorious autumn colours and our heater turned on full blast. Lovely nevertheless.
